take charge of him, if she will send him to France; as for herself, she can have all she wants. At the time I refused to recognise her I was influenced by political considerations; apart from that, I wish to provide for her son to her satisfaction. For the rest, deal with this matter secretly and tactfully.

£3d, Aramla:

I got here at four. Apparently there are serious disturbances at Madrid;

86th. The battle of Tiulela completes that of Espinosa. The army of Andalusia commanded by Castafios, that of Aragon commanded by Palafox, those of Valencia and of New Castillo, are destroyed and scattered. We have captured many guns and prisoners and much baggage.

27th. In six days I shall be in Madrid.

80th, at the foot of the Somosierra:

(Colonel Fire: Impossible, sire!)

That is a word I don't know!

(To the Polish lancers.) Carry that position, in a gallop!

(Koisietulski: Forward, trot! Vive TEmpereur!)

On the summit of the Somosierra: (The last surviving Polish officer, to Berthier: I am dying, there arc the guns; tell the Emperor!)

You are worthy of my Old Guard! I proclaim you my bravest cavalry!

(The Polish lancers: Ave Ccesar!)

Buitrago:

(To Joseph.) We have had an engagement. A corps